LIFE OF SIR WILLIAM DUGDALE.

LANCASHIRE had the honour to be the birthplace and home of the immediate ancestors of sir William Dugdale, who in the introduction to his History of Warwickshire[1] has recorded the fact; but the learned herald was not descended from one of our great families of whom it may be said with truth that they lose themselves in the ages which are past, but who are still remembered by deeds that will not die.

John Dugdale, of Chatburn near Clitheroe, was frequently a juryman of the court of the abbot and convent of Whalley held for the exempt jurisdiction of the royal forests of Bowland, Pendle, Rossendale and Blackburnshire,[2] and occupied lands belonging to the abbey between the years 1515 and 1534. He was probably the father of John Dugdale jun. of Chatburn who was living in the year 1538, and a relative of James Dugdale who is named in a Compotus of Whalley abbey, a payment being made — "Jacobo Dugdale, usque Lychfield pro R. Towneley, xvi^{d}," who appears to have gone to the ecclesiastical court on business.[3] Mr. Hamper thinks that this man might have been the grandfather of sir William Dugdale,[4] but he overlooked the important fact that James Dugdale was a monk of the abbey, and that his name did not occur in the later Compotus of 1521 but in the earlier one of 1478, which would not agree with Mr. Hamper's computation of dates.[5]

The name often occurs in connection with the abbey, which possessed lands and considerable messuage property in Clitheroe and the surrounding hamlets at the dissolution of the house. In the year 1538 a minute survey of its possessions was made by the crown,[6] and amongst the abbey tenants at will, in that year, are not fewer than six persons of the name of Dugdale, all being of the peasant or agricultural class. John Dugdale sen. and John Dugdale jun. were small holders, as well as Nicholas and Henry Dugdale. "Mr. William Dugdale sen^{r} and Mr. William Dugdale jun^{r}"[7] were connected with the abbey in some way not stated, but from their mode of description were probably in a somewhat less humble position;

whilst Christopher and John Dugdale of Chatburn were ordinary tenants.

James Dugdale of Clitheroe, the grandfather of sir William, is styled by Anthony à Wood a "gentleman;"[8] and the grandson, with pardonable vanity, has described him as descended "ex antiqua ejusdem cognom. familia." He is also said to have borne coat armour, but by what right is not named. It was however so similar to the heraldic bearing of a family of the name of Uvedale that Wood, with marvellous puerility, conjectured that Dugdale was a corruption of De Uvedale; and he also states that sir William Dugdale seemed to be of the same opinion, although he paid little regard to his own family and knew nothing of his ancestors,[9] which may be fairly assumed to be a strong proof of their obscurity. He was however wishful to be thought a member of an ancient house, of which, unfortunately, there are no records.

There were at the commencement of the sixteenth century two contemporaneous families within the ancient parish of Whalley bearing the respective surnames of Uvedale[10] and Dugdale, and as they are said to have borne the same arms, with a difference, although they did not appear at any of the Lancashire Heraldic Visitations, the probability seems to be that, if they were entitled to such a distinction, the Dugdales had acquired the arms of their neighbours by marriage, and adopted them as their own. Still the proof is wanting, and it must have been patent to a shrewd man like Wood that the fact laid on the surface. The Dugdales, Uvedales, and another Clitheroe family named Bleasdale, were all apparently of the class of husbandmen, and hardly reached the rank of yeomen.

James, the grandfather of sir William, with whom the pedigree commences,[11] lived at Clitheroe, and married —— daughter of Thomas Woodcock of that place, and had issue an only son John, who was born in the year 1552, and doubtless educated at the royal grammar school of Clitheroe, then recently founded by queen Mary, as it is recorded that he was "adorned with such erudition as his native place could afford."[12] His connection with the university of Oxford is not very accu-

[12] Wood's Life of Dugdale, MS. 8560, Ashmolean library; Hamper's Life, p. 6, Note. On the 2nd May 1622 Mr. William Dugdale was one of the governors of Clitheroe school and unable to write (being a marksman). He was probably not "one of the three antient governors" who had been condemned by sir Raphe Assheton, Richard Shuttleworth and John Greenacres esquires; gentlemen who are described by their elders to bishop Bridgeman, the visitor of the school, as "young men of little experience, but of great forwardness and wealth." (Lanc. MSS., vol. xxxi. p. 478-79.) Mr. John Dugdale was master of Garstang school in 1629, and probably earlier. (Ibid.)

rately stated by his son, and differs from the account given by Anthony à Wood. Sir William has recorded that his father had been a private tutor in lord Giles Paulet's family, had received his chief education in St. John's college, Oxford, where he studied civil law, and that he took the degree of master of arts,[13] and remained at Oxford as tutor to William Paulet, a grandson of the marquess of Winchester.

Anthony à Wood with his usual minuteness and scrupulous exactness has recorded — perhaps not without a touch of vindictiveness, for he had at the moment a grudge against sir William — that John Dugdale, "a very sober and prudent person," accompanied several of his pupils to Oxford immediately after Christmas 1582,[14] and that on the 9th of February 1582–83 his young scholar Paulet was matriculated of St. John's college. He had now, according to Wood, no official connection with any of his former pupils, but having a kinsman, William Dugdale, clerk or servant to sir William Cordell, master of the rolls, and also at that time bursar and steward of St. John's, the young schoolmaster, for such he had probably been whilst in the country, was induced himself, being then in his thirtieth year, to matriculate of St. John's college. Wood says that here he studied civil law, wore the gown of a civilian, but left the university, after fourteen years' residence, without any degree either in law or arts.

[13] So stated on his monument in Shustoke church (Hamper's Life, Appendix, p. 515).

[14] Dugdale's Life, MS. 8560, lately in the Ashm. now in the Bodl.

He had however succeeded his kinsman, of whom nothing more is known, both as bursar and steward of the college.

On leaving Oxford he "sold what he had in Lancashire"[15] and closed his connection with the county. He purchased a lease, of Mr. Paulet, of the impropriate rectory of Shustoke in Warwickshire and settled there. About the year 1596 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Arthur Swynfyn esq. of Dunchurch, by whom he had issue a daughter Mary, and one son William, the future historian of his native county. John Dugdale died on the 24th July 1624, aged 72, having been described by his son, two years before, as being "aged, very infirm and suffering from a dead palsy in his limbs." His wife died before him.

William Dugdale, born at Shustoke on the 12th September 1605, was educated at the grammar school of Coventry, which he left when about fifteen years of age, and afterwards studied civil law and history under his father's immediate direction. The law of primogeniture and entail and of succession to territorial wealth and dignities, or the great old hereditary laws of England which had kept society together, and made the country what it is, had been the first subjects mastered by the stripling, and they seem to have given a bias to his views and also to his future studies and investigations. He married on the 17th March 1622–23, when only in his eighteenth year, at the special request of his father, Margery, second daughter of John Huntbach of Seawell in the county of Stafford, gent., by whom he had issue six sons and twelve daughters who do not appear to have been any hindrance to the prosecuting of his favourite pursuits, and none of whom married individuals of family or note except one daughter, who became the wife of Elias Ashmole, the founder of the museum at Oxford. The year after his father's death he purchased the hall and small manor of Blythe in the parish of Shustoke, which from this time he made his ordinary place of abode. Here he improved the house, cultivated the estate, lived as a country gentleman, and ended his days.

His natural inclination leading him to the study of antiquities, shortly after his settling at Blythe hall, he became acquainted with his learned neighbour, Mr. William Burton the historian of Leicestershire, who encouraged his studies and promoted his views. At this early period of his life he also formed an intimate acquaintance with sir Symon Archer of Tanworth in Warwickshire, who had made some topographical collections for a history of the county, which about the year 1630 he placed in Mr. Dugdale's hands. He also introduced his young and zealous fellow antiquary to the principal county families, who urged him to proceed with the history; and from this time he continued to accumulate materials for that purpose. Sir Symon Archer also took an opportunity of introducing him to the notice of sir Henry Spelman, then a very old man but well disposed to foster the talents and studies of his new acquaintance. He suggested that Dugdale was a very fit person, as Camden had been, to serve the king in the office of arms, and appears to have voluntarily recommended him to the notice of lord Arundel, at that time the earl marshal. The recommendation of such a man as Spelman could not fail of being attended with success. But this was not Dugdale's only obligation to the great scholar. He was the first to mention to the young antiquary a name which he had not before heard, and which was destined to be, in after years, closely associated with his own. This was Roger Dodsworth.

Dodsworth[16] was at that time an indefatigable student

[16] Roger Dodsworth was the son of Matthew Dodsworth esq., chancellor of York, and was born on the 24th July 1585. He was partly educated at Warton school in North Lancashire, (Gastrell's Notitia, vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 561), and married Holcroft, daughter of Robert Hesketh of Rufford esq., and widow of Laurence Rosthorne of New hall esq. He died in August 1654, probably at Hutton Grange, and was buried at Rufford. (Wood's Fasti Oxon., Bliss, pt. ii. col. 24; Dugdale's Lanc. Visit. p. 135.) Dr. Henry Fairfax (nephew of lord Fairfax) dean of Norwich, bequeathed in 1673 one hundred and twenty-two volumes of Dodsworth's own writing, and other manuscripts and paper books, amounting in the whole to one hundred and sixty-two volumes, to the Bodleian library, Oxford, where they are now kept. All the information contained in them relating to the county palatine of Lancaster has been transcribed by the Rev. G. J. Piccope, M.A., and the several volumes are now deposited in the Chetham library with Mr. Piccope's other MS. collections.

of Yorkshire antiquities, especially in connection with the foundation of monasteries in the north of England, and sir Henry Spelman urged Dugdale to unite with Dodsworth in arranging and completing his laborious and extensive collections. The two antiquaries were in the vigour of life, Dodsworth being five and forty and Dugdale twenty years younger, and both of them hard students. They concurred in sir Henry Spelman's views, and decided to prosecute together the labour of obtaining such materials as were still necessary for enlarging and completing the undertaking which both had, independently, projected.

Dugdale became acquainted about this time with other intelligent antiquaries, by whom he was much encouraged. It was probably through Dodsworth that he was brought under the notice of Mr. Richard Gascoyne, a wealthy Yorkshire gentleman, especially well skilled in genealogy, who introduced him to sir Christopher afterwards lord Hatton of Kirkby in Northamptonshire. This nobleman was an accomplished scholar, an intelligent antiquary and a loyal son of the Church of England, and will always be remembered as the personal friend of bishop Jeremy Taylor and the Mecænas of literary men. He became a substantial patron of the young student, both as a suffering loyalist and also that his study of antiquities might be continued. There does not however appear to be sufficient evidence for bishop Heber's statement that it was at Hatton's suggestion and with his assistance that Dugdale first undertook his Monasticon.[17] The national records in all the great public offices were soon rendered accessible to him, and at this time Roger Dodsworth was assisting him in his daily researches.

In September 1638 Dugdale was created by the earl marshal Blanch Lyon, and in the following year Rouge Croix Pursuivant, which gave him rooms in the College of arms and, with some other advantages, 20*l.* a year out of the king's exchequer.

From this time he chiefly lived in London, in order that he might devote all his time and labour to the examination and abstracting of the public records.

The turbulent state of the country alarmed all thoughtful men, who saw that a civil war was impending with its inevitable horrors, and in the summer of 1641 Dugdale, encouraged by sir Christopher Hatton, and with the assistance of Mr. William Sedgwick a skilful arms painter, carefully copied all the monumental epitaphs and armorial bearings, both in stone and glass, in St. Paul's cathedral and Westminster abbey, and afterwards did the same in many of the principal cathedrals and churches in England, and thus providentially preserved them for future and better times.[18]

In 1642 the king was in the north and, being constrained to continue there, was surrounded by many loyal noblemen and gentlemen. On the 1st of June Dugdale, as a pursuivant, was summoned away from his laborious historical and antiquarian investigations and required to repair to the king at York. He remained in his majesty's service during the various vicissitudes of the miserable war, and was sent with messages, from time to time, to the rebel chiefs at Banbury, Warwick and elsewhere. His strong royalist principles led him to discharge his official duties with great energy and zeal, and the king probably had not a more loyal and devoted subject in his service than the young herald. Nor did he, owing to the impecuniosity of his royal master, receive the wages which he had so well earned. It appears that he had stipulated to receive thirteen shillings and fourpence per day, and eightpence per mile for travelling expenses for himself and man servant, but payment was not made.[19] On taking up his abode with the king at Oxford, as some acknowledgment of his useful and ill-requited services, he was admitted master of arts on the 1st of November 1642,[20] a literary distinction which he knew well how to value, and, in his case, properly conferred. He had left his wife and children, his home and friends, a fair competency and a good position, behind him, for scenes with which he was unfamiliar, and for duties which he had not before discharged. He was soon recognized as a partisan of the king, and his estate in Warwickshire was sequestered by the parliament. He still remained at Oxford and continued to note in his brief diary, which has been published,[21] the chief events which occurred, not only in the city until its surrender to the parliament, but in various parts of the kingdom during the continuance of the war.

In these troubled years, his habits of study remained unchanged, and the moral lustre of his character was undimmed. Historical investigations were made, and ancient records, perhaps too hastily, examined in the Bodleian and in the various college libraries, not only in connection with Dodsworth's great undertaking, but also with his own Baronage, the first genealogical history of our nobility,[22] and other works, his devotion to the royal cause continuing unabated. These abundant stores of information were always ready for illustration and proof. At this time, no doubt, he paid attention to the old German and Saxon languages, and seems to have acquired some knowledge of the Teutonic, Danish and Icelandic. With the aid of such scholars as he met at Oxford, and especially of Somner the first Saxon linguist of his day, this might have been expected.[23] The Celtic and Norman languages and their liegers, chronicles and records were familiar to him. The archæology of names and places, and his analytical investigations of their origin generally indicate sound knowledge of the subject.

On the 16th April 1644 he was created Chester herald.[24]

In June 1646 the garrison of Oxford surrendered, and Dugdale repairing to London, made his composition at Goldsmith's hall. The poor scholar was fined for his royalty 186*l.*—to him a large sum, and not easily raised, so that his privations at this time were great if not extreme. Here he again met with his friend Dodsworth, whose principles were similar to his own, although the near relative of John Rushworth and of Thomas lord Fairfax, both resolute parliamentarians. Whilst he informed Dodsworth how much he had added, by drudgery at his task and almost unmatched perseverance, to his own materials for the projected Monasticon, he learnt from the Yorkshire antiquary that numerous large chests of original evidences relating to the Yorkshire monasteries, which had been deposited in St. Mary's tower at York, had been carefully transcribed by himself and Christopher Towneley, the learned attorney, of Moorhiles near Colne in Lancashire, before that fortification had been blown up and its literary treasures destroyed.[25]

In May 1648 Dugdale accompanied lady Hatton, the wife of his patron, to France, to join her husband who had found it necessary to leave England and was living in exile. He eagerly availed himself of the opportunity, which extended over several months, of consulting the historical MS. collections, placed at his service, of the learned Andrew du Chesne, relating to the French and Norman monasteries and the alien priories in England, which had been cells or filial dependencies of the great continental abbeys.[26] Of the information thus obtained Dugdale made a copious use in his great work.

As a proof of Dodsworth's almost incredible industry, certainly not inferior to his colleague's, he has himself stated in a letter, dated 24th May 1650, that he was engaged in making transcripts in the tower "from eight in the morning until nine in the evening, and never stir'd off the place to eat one bitt of bread."[27] We do not feel at all surprised to read, in the next sentence, "I am so weary that I can do nothing. I am tyred and sleepy, and can write no more." Anthony à Wood, at the time he was "standing silent," in the sharp remembrance of some of Mr. Sheldon's lost MSS.[28] hereafter mentioned, has recorded that a "very different course" was adopted by Dugdale, probably referring to his copious and generous libations[29] and not to his literary labours, for in 1658 Dr. John Worthington, the famous Manchester scholar and master of Jesus college, Cambridge, speaks of Dugdale's "indefatigable and unexpressible industry,"[30] and Wood himself afterwards mentions this as one of the historian's characteristics.

We are unable to apportion their respective parts of the Monasticon to each writer, but there appears to be a general opinion that Dodsworth was the chief collector of the materials,[31] although the merit of the undertaking, a considerable amount of information, the arrangement of the matter and the correction of the press, are justly due to Dugdale, whom we now know endured an incalculable amount of labour with untiring perseverance for many years, along with his friend, in order that all available sources of information might be explored and exhausted. At last the tedious, difficult and expensive work was considered by Dodsworth to be ready for the press, the result and the reward of their united studies. Writing to Mr. Vernon of Shakerley, a fellow-antiquary, on the 29th January 1652–53, Dugdale names that he had been eight or nine months in London entirely occupied with the Monasticon, at that time in the press, and says: "Soe great a task have I had to bring Mr. Dodsworth's confused collections into any order, and to perfect the 'copy' from the tower and sir Thomas Cotton's library."[32] Great injustice has been done to the memory and labour of Dugdale by Dr. Whitaker and Mr. Gough, who attribute the whole merit of the undertaking to Dodsworth. Dr. Whitaker says, that as Dodsworth unfortunately died in Lancashire in August 1654, before one-tenth part of the impression of the Monasticon was worked off, an opportunity presented itself, which Dugdale had not the fortitude to resist, of associating his own name with that of the real compiler.[33] And Mr. Gough has asserted in still stronger language, without adducing any proof, that the two first volumes of the Monasticon, though published under Dodsworth's and Dugdale's names conjointly, were both collected and written totally by the former.[34] It may be safely affirmed that Whitaker's assertion is halting and inconclusive, and that Gough's assertion is bold and baseless.

[31] There is sufficient proof that Dugdale had great literary and antiquarian aid from friends in all his works, and without it his labours often would have been unsuccessful, and his information incomplete. In his Warwickshire, his assistants were Burton and Archer; in his Monasticon, Dodsworth, Somner and Hopkinson; in his Baronage, Anthony à Wood; in his History of Saint Paul's, archbishop Sheldon.

[32] Corresp., p. 266. [33] Hist. of Richmondshire, vol. i. p. 299.
[34] Brit. Topograph., vol. ii. p. 395. Chalmers repeats the statement, Biog. Dict., voce DUGDALE.

Dugdale was not frugal of praise nor indisposed to award to his friend the great merit due to him in this undertaking. Addressing Mr. Vernon of Shakerley, on the 2nd August 1651, he observed: "Mr. Dodsworth's work of Monastery Foundations is ready for the press, if the times were still as they have been, to vend it, in case it were printed,"[35] although Dugdale found it necessary afterwards to qualify the opinion which he had too hastily expressed, as he found it unfit for publication. He also mentions in no parsimonious terms the great share Dodsworth had in the work, and the names of the two antiquaries very properly appeared on the title-page — "Per Rogerum Dodsworth, Eborac. Gulielmus Dugdale, Warwic. A.D. 1655." Folio.

There is no evidence that Dugdale assumed, or attempted to assume, more than he was fairly entitled to in this great undertaking.

Somner, the accomplished Saxon scholar and the historian of Canterbury, who was equally the personal friend and coadjutor of the two historians, and who had assisted them both in their labours, writing to Dugdale on the 10th November 1654, in a somewhat querulous tone, still felt bound to state: "I am persuaded, if not the greater, yet the better part of the collection is yours;"[36] whilst Anthony à Wood says, that Dodsworth was a man of wonderful industry but less judgment, collecting and transcribing, but never published anything.[37] Nothing seems to exist to invalidate these statements, and it may safely be assumed that Dugdale was not the utterly unscrupulous and shamelessly selfish man which he has, on insufficient evidence, been described.

The first volume of this great national work, next in importance to Domesday Book, was financially a failure. The booksellers had undervalued the undertaking, and the terms offered by them were so contemptible, that the money would barely have paid for the transcripts. In this dilemma the two historians determined to borrow several sums of money and themselves to defray the expense of printing and publishing.[38] Five years elapsed before the greater part of the copies was disposed of, nor had Dugdale money to proceed with the second volume until the first had been sold, as he took upon himself the entire expense of paper and printing, and the risk of sale. Twelve years afterwards the third volume appeared, with some valuable additions by Anthony à Wood and sir Thomas Herbert, and Dugdale's name alone appeared on the title-page. For this volume he received the sum of 50*l.* and twenty copies. As a proof of Dugdale's honourable dealing with the family of Dodsworth and of the relative interest which each had in the work, it ap-

[38] Dodsworth pawned six Lieger books to sir Thomas Widdrington, which are supposed to have been deposited as a security for money advanced towards defraying the expence of printing the Monasticon. pears that in the year 1674, twenty years after Dodsworth's death, the widow of Dodsworth's son shared the profits of the sale due from the publisher, Mrs. Dodsworth receiving 35*l.* 10*s.* and Dugdale 42*l.*, so that the share of the profits, probably like the labours of the two historians, had been nearly the same.[39] Without at all depreciating the work of Dodsworth, it is clear that his friend was better able than himself to formulate documents, to generalise facts, and to analyse historical evidence. He planned and executed with considerable method not only the Monasticon but other works possessing a large and comprehensive amount of information both original and acquired, being a clever practical man of business without having any of the higher qualities of genius. It would however require a great effort of genius and an exuberant fancy to extract poetry from old charters and legal documents, unless it were such poetry as the muse of Giles Jacob gent., the great legal antiquary, produced.

It may be stated that though subsequent editions of this noble work have from time to time appeared, yet that which has superseded them all is the edition in six folio volumes, enriched by a large accession of original materials and important corrections of former errors, by John Caley esq., F.S.A., sir Henry Ellis, secretary to the Society of Antiquaries and keeper of the manuscripts in the British museum, and the rev. Bulkeley Bandinel,

D.D., keeper of the Bodleian library, Oxford, fol. 1817–1830.[40]

Before the Restoration he had written his History of Warwickshire, which had employed him nearly thirty years and had been his first literary undertaking, and it was published in 1656 in folio. The great celebrity which he had attained by his first publication not only in England but on the Continent, had paved the way for a favourable reception of his next work, — a work which has always taken the highest place in this class of historical literature, as we find in it the copious and diversified historical matter of Nichols and Surtees, but neither the lucid arrangement of Baker, nor the acute criticism of Hunter, nor the incomparable style of Whitaker. Such a history required a tenacious memory, an exact and comprehensive acquaintance with details, and a power of balancing probabilities under various circumstances; and these qualifications Dugdale possessed. His skill is displayed in disposing of his materials and bringing them together in a clear, consecutive and consistent narrative form, and his accuracy in adducing all his authorities. The learned Somner, in a letter to the author, described it, at the time of its publication, as "so copious and well-stored for the matter, so curious and well-contrived for the forme — a piece indeed, without all flattery I speak it, to whose composure an industrious hand and an ingenious head, have both so well concurred as to render it, in one word, a master-piece. You have drawn the bridge after you and left it impossible for any man to follow you."[41] And Jeremy Taylor, whom Dugdale had met at Oxford in 1642, acknowledging the present of a copy from the author, September 22nd 1656, observed: "I confesse I was greedy to see and to read ye booke; and if I had knowne so much of it as now I doe I should have been more greedy of it; for if I have any skill in any thing it is by very much the best of any thing that ever I saw in that kind."[42] And in our century Dr. Whitaker has observed, that "there are works which scrupulous accuracy united with stubborn integrity, has elevated to the rank of legal evidence. Such is Dugdale's Warwickshire."[43]

Although Dugdale witnessed the sun of Royalism set in the deepest gloom at Whitehall he lived to see and to rejoice in its rise with almost unparalleled splendour at the Restoration[44] and keep in the ascendancy during the remainder of his life. On the 18th June 1660 he was advanced to the honour of Norroy King at Arms, and he had done much to justify his elevation to so important a position. His long official experience in his profession of arms, his acquaintance with genealogy and heraldic nomenclature, with antiquarian literature and documentary evidence, as well as his clear judgment in the determination of difficult and intricate questions of descent, which were sure to come under his notice, had already secured him a distinguished literary name, and no one seemed to have been trained for the office like himself, and therefore any other appointment would have been detrimental to the College of arms. Nor had his devoted loyalty and fine patriotic spirit been forgotten by the light-hearted and ungrateful king whose cause, as well as that of the kingdom, Dugdale had served so well.

In 1662 he published his History of Embanking and Draining the Great Level. In 1666 appeared his Origines Juridiciales, being a history of the law courts with biographical notices of their great officers. In the same year he methodized and published at the solicitation of archbishop Sheldon and the earl of Clarendon two volumes of sir Henry Spelman's Collection of the Provincial Councils in England and also his Glossary, and these are only some of the more important of his publications.

The College of arms had its "deputies" in various parts of the country, and Mr. King, the late able and excellent York herald, was of opinion that some commission was officially granted to them. The powers were probably not minutely defined, which occasionally led to the paramount claims of the earl marshal and his superior officers not being strictly regarded. This seems to have been the case with the Holmes' of Chester, whose hereditary love of genealogy and long connection with the College of arms led them to be looked upon as the great heralds of the north, and they appear to have exercised an authority and to have enjoyed a reputation hardly inferior to that of the college itself. As early as the year 1644, when Dugdale was himself a subordinate herald in the college, he confronted Holme the Chester arms painter[45] and destroyed his work, erected, we may suppose not without some authority, in one of the churches of that city. Holme, at the instigation of the family by whom he had been employed, re-erected the condemned atchievement in the same church. The civil wars at that time found other work for Dugdale, and the Puritans disregarding what they deemed puerile vanities, Holme, who was a royalist, went on in his heraldic career unchecked by any authority. But the times changed, "the noble science" revived, and the heralds it was found, had lost none of their ancient power, whilst Norroy, now known as a learned historian, was pleasantly basking in the sunshine of court favour. The visitation of Lancashire and Cheshire had brought again to his

[45] This was Randle Holme the third and best of the antiquaries of that name, and the author of The Academie of Armourie, fol. 1688, a book now scarce and little known, but full of curious information connected with heraldry and antiquarian lore. The voluminous MS. collections of the four Randle Holmes, relating principally to Cheshire and Lancashire, are preserved in the British museum.

actual notice the inconvenient proceedings of his old adversary the Chester arms painter. Norroy received about the 30th May 1665 a letter from his antiquarian friend Theophilus Howorth of Howorth hall near Rochdale esq., who was at that time following his profession as a physician in Manchester, and who seems to have been well disposed to favour the herald in the vindication of his rights as well as in his pursuit of power and emolument, furnishing him with information to the prejudice of Randle Holme,[46] whom he described as "not legally qualifyed" to marshal funerals especially the imposing pageant at the funeral of sir Ralph Assheton of Middleton bart. to which he referred. And yet Randle Holme, in a letter addressed to Dugdale on the 11th Theophilus Howorth was the fourth son but eventually heir of Edmund Howorth of Howorth hall near Rochdale gent., and of his wife Elizabeth, daughter of William Asheton of Clegg hall esq. He was baptised at Rochdale on the 2nd January 1613–14, educated at the grammar school, Rochdale, and entered of Magdalen college, Cambridge, but whether he graduated at the usual time is unknown. He became M.D. 2nd July 1661, and on the 8th July 1669 was incorporated in the university of Oxford. (Wood's Fasti, p. 850.) He gave to Brasenose college a large silver tankard, with an inscription and his arms engraven upon it, yet remaining in the college. He was the faithful Argus of Dugdale in Lancashire, and an intimate personal friend and correspondent, although this is the only letter printed by Mr. Hamper in the Correspondence, and he had been unable to discover who the Doctor was. A large collection of his antiquarian and family papers have been abstracted in the Lanc. MSS., vol. xi. pp. 1–151. Dr. Howorth was a painstaking antiquary, and one of the most loyal and devoted subjects of the king during the civil war. At the Restoration his loyalty was recognized in an elaborate and carefully written testimonial attested by the autograph signatures of lord Derby, lord Molyneux, and more than a score of the most opulent and distinguished heads of families in Lancashire and Cheshire; and the king placed him in the commission of the peace for the palatinate and specially granted him an augmentation to his arms in commemoration of his patriotism.

It is worthy of note that he had in his muniment room original deeds and evidences of his ancestors in unbroken succession from the time of Henry II. to his own, and all these were examined and abstracted by Dugdale; and a pedigree written on vellum of marvellous size with richly emblazoned arms and vouchers in the margin, deduced and authenticated by the autograph and official seal of Dugdale, still exists and had been examined by Dr. Whitaker (Whalley, Add., p. 544, 3rd ed.), but is unknown in the College of arms. In 1613 and 1664–5 a few meagre

December 1661, described himself as "a friend to the court" of heralds, and as one whose position entitled him to ask a favour, as he "was endeavouring to advance the credit of the office.[47] The merits of Randle Holme and his great services were all overlooked by Dugdale. There can be but one opinion that he was a skilled herald, a good genealogist, and possessed of a vast treasure house of archæological knowledge. He and several of his ancestors had been engaged almost a century in the same pursuits which had rendered Dugdale so distinguished, and without the Wodenotes, Cookes and Holmes, heraldry and genealogy would hardly have been in Cheshire, and in the presence of that fact all questions descents only were recorded at the Visitations. The most remarkable feature in the history of Dr. Howorth is his magnificent claim that his house was the parent stock of the ducal house of Howard; and the claim was allowed and received, as Dr. Whitaker says, by "the capacious faith of Dugdale," and attested under his own hand, "without a shadow of proof"! In the Baronage, published ten years after this fatal admission, Dugdale is ominously silent on the subject of the Rochdale Howards.

Dr. Howorth succeeded in 1657 to the small family estate on the death of his young nephew, Robert Howorth esq., a barrister of Gray's inn, unmarried. The Doctor married Mary, daughter of Henry Ashurst of Ashurst esq., and widow of Andrew Stone, citizen and merchant tailor of London, by whom he had a son and a daughter, who survived to maturity, and the family became extinct in the direct male line on the death of the rev. Dr. Radcliffe Howorth, grandson of Theophilus, in 1768. Dr. Theophilus Howorth died at Manchester on the 9th April and was buried in the Collegiate church on the 12th of the same month, 1671, aged 57 years. (Register Book.) His short will is dated 31st March 1671, and was proved at Chester. (Lanc. MSS., vol. xi. p. 151.)

of fees, banners and penons become to posterity of secondary importance. The rights of the college ought certainly to have been guarded, and its rules, if rules it had, properly administered. Nor does there seem to have been any maladministration of them on the part of Randle Holme. If it may be doubted that there was an absence of legally constituted authority, there were at least efficiency and ability. His popularity in Lancashire and Cheshire was great, his management good, and his fees probably large; but then it was contended by Dugdale that official etiquette was molested and precedent invaded. No indulgence could be shown such a man, no sympathy with his labours expressed, and his assumed delegated powers were utterly ignored. He might be a good officer, but he was not a good official of the heralds' college. He had a ruler and he was to feel his power. Dugdale interfered, perhaps not wrongly but meanly, and his conduct to his subordinate was not of the chivalrous character, but clearly influenced by mercenary or at least by monetary motives. He made no secret of his hostility to a brother antiquary and fellow-herald, and determined to prosecute him in the law courts. Randle Holme's sole basis of his justification of marshalling funerals, preparing pedigrees, emblazoning arms and collecting, registering and preserving antiquarian and historical materials, was the commission which he and his forefathers had received from preceding heralds. Dugdale argued that the "deputies" were not the officers of the college but of individual heralds, and that their powers might be withdrawn, but assuredly ceased with the officers who conferred them. There was probably a difference of opinion among the lawyers on the subject, and an action at law was commenced against Holme, not in Cheshire where the popular feeling in his favour was strongly pronounced, but in the county of Stafford where the jury would be at least uninfluenced by personal considerations. We may conclude that the writ to remove the venu was the act of Dugdale, whose opposition was resolute throughout the whole business.

The opposition to any heraldic supremacy, not only in the northern counties but elsewhere, had been growing during the civil war and had not subsided with the return of the monarchy and constitution; but it might have been foreseen that the prerogatives of the College of arms would not be foregone by its officers, and that the holders of such privileges would not be deprived of their rights by a court of law. Dugdale gained a verdict, and if Randle Holme afterwards wished to participate in the benefits of the court of chivalry, he would be compelled to do so on terms to be dictated by, I fear, his jealous rival.

The King of arms, arrayed in his robes, wig and gloves, now proceeded to wield his sceptre in his northern and decaying realm, with all due promptitude and efficiency, in the very presence of his vanquished brother and subject.

It is recorded that on the 9th April 1667, the year before he obtained his verdict, he rode to Manchester, and the next day went to Middleton and "pulled down the atchievements hung up by Holme of Chester at the funeral of Sir Raphe Ashton K^t^ and B^t^ 2 May 1665, and returned to Manchester that night."[48] And on the very day after his triumph at the assize at Stafford he posted direct to Holmes Chapel in Cheshire, and on the 14th he "puld down the atchievements hung up in Nether Peover church for Mr. Cholmley of Holford, and those in Budworth for Merbury of Merbury, and rode that night to Sr Peter Leycester's at Tabley."[49] Dugdale's verdict seems to have inspired him with the iconoclastic spirit of the more extreme Puritans. Two days after these exploits he proceeded on horseback, like a knight errant, to Biddulph in Staffordshire, to the discomfort of Randle Holme, and there pulled down the atchievement hung up for sir John Bowyer and his lady.[50] Nor was his zeal against the Chester antiquary extinguished yet. On the 4th of August in the same year, we find him at Ingestrie with his steady friend and fellow antiquary, Walter Chetwynd esq., but he had important duties to discharge, for Randle Holme's work had not yet been broken down in that place "with axes and hammers." Dugdale's stay was brief as he was on his way to Chester, and remaining one night with sir Thomas Delves at Doddington and another with sir Thomas Mainwaring at Baddeley, he proceeded to Cholmondeley castle and remained the guest of lord Cholmondeley for a few days.[51] No doubt the old herald of Chester heard with some dismay of the near approach of his resolute and formidable foe, who sought by every means, except courtesy and conciliation, to make the gentry of the North acquainted with his proceedings. On the 11th August 1669 Norroy appeared at Chester, and found that his former acts had been persistently disregarded, his office again invaded, and his authority treated with contempt. His old personal friends sir Peter Leycester and sir Thomas Mainwaring were, as he well knew, formidable literary antagonists, but never proceeded to the extremities which marked the professional animosity of himself and Randle Holme. The latter braved all the risks of legal punishments and penalties, which had been severe and exemplary, and the former continued bent on his destruction. He records: At Chester, "where I pulld down those atchievements wch Holmes the paynter had set up again in St John's church for alderman Walley, wch I took down in A° 1644. And that night I rode to Chirke in Flintshire [sir T. Middleton's house] wth Mr Chomley of Vale Royall, to view what was hung up by Holmes ye paynter, at Sr F. Middleton's funerall."[52] In a letter of this date, addressed to his personal friend, Mr. Gregory King, and which had been brought rather unnecessarily under Dugdale's notice, Holme had said that Norroy's proceedings would be of no advantage to him (Norroy), for that he (Holme) would work any thing that gentlemen should set him to do, and that they would order their own concerns, as for example, Mrs. Frances Booth's funeral was set out by sir John Booth without consultation of the heralds.[53] Gentlemen did not bear supposed injuries patiently, although they were powerless to avenge the King of the Province, but wished to act independently of him.

In the year following Dugdale was again in Cheshire. 1670, August 16th, he was with sir Peter Leycester at Tabley, and the next day at lord Delamere's; but the great object of his visit was not accomplished until he arrived on the 18th at Budworth, where he pulled down and defaced those atchievements "which Holme the paynter of Chester had hung up again for Mr Marbury wch I puld down once before."[54] On that night he rode to lord Cholmondeley's house, and on the 19th he went to Eston (Eastham ?) in Wyrrall, where he pulled down and defaced two penons "which Holmes had hung up in the church for Mr Poole of Poole; and that night lodg'd at Chester." Having stayed two or three days with lord [53] Diary, p. 130. Randle Holme's brother-in-law was the industrious Dr. Richard Keurden the antiquary, who lies buried in Leyland churchyard, and both of them were the intimate friends of Gregory King the herald, who in January 1669 visited Holme at Chester. (Harl. MS. 2042; Baines' Hist. Lanc., vol. i. p. 210.) Gregory King was Dugdale's clerk, and accompanied him in his Visitation of Lancashire. (Visit. Lanc. 1664-5, Introd. p. iv.) He was an admirable heraldic artist, but was badly paid by Dugdale. (Diary, p. 126.) King's subsequent great marriage but mesalliance perhaps brought him more honour than happiness.

Cholmondeley he went on the 22nd to Chirke, where he "puld down and defaced divers penons and other atchievements hung by Holmes for Sr Thomas Middleton and his son." [55]

It must be admitted that the old families stood nobly by their colours until Dugdale hauled them down, and even after the outrage, when his back was turned, they nailed them up again. Nor does it appear that the Stafford verdict had satisfactorily settled the point in dispute, for if Holme was crushed, the gentry do not seem to have been convinced that either he or they had exceeded their powers, and consequently they still continued to exercise them. All this was in accordance with the spirit of the time, which was as much to blame as either of the disputants. Men were self-willed and outspoken, and hated moderate measures. In the midst of these annoyances he continued his literary labours, and after the toil of thirty years published, in the year 1675–76, his great work entitled The Baronage of England; of which Mr. Hunter observes that it is "a work abounding in the most valuable information, and far less inaccurate than a first attempt of the kind might reasonably be expected, where one object was to recal many half-perished names, and to arrange them in exact genealogical order, a work of which none can comprehend the nicety and difficulty but those who have actually made the experiment." [56] Mr. Mitford says that Gray seldom closed his laborious inquiries till he had exhausted the means of further investigation, and that to him even "the genealogical researches of Dugdale were incomplete."[57] In the second edition he was materially assisted in the corrections and additions by Anthony à Wood.

On the 20th February 1676–77 sir Edward Walker, Garter, died. Dugdale had paid him a visit in his illness a few months previously at Clopton, near Stratford-upon-Avon,[58] and would not forget that Garter had been his predecessor in all his various gradations in the college. There was a sharp contest on the subject of the appointment to the vacant place between the king and the earl marshal and his deputy, the king claiming the nomination as sovereign of the most noble order of the Garter, and the earl in right of his hereditary office as chief of the college and according to ancient precedent. Both the royal and the noble disputant had their own friends in view, and it is humiliating to have to record that although Dugdale was obviously the one man living who was the best fitted for the office and had earned it in many ways, he was almost accidentally appointed, not in recognition of past services, but merely as a third party to terminate the dispute of the rival claimants to the patronage. On the 3rd April 1677 he was nominated, and on the 24th May was created, Garter by the earl of Peterborough, deputy earl marshal,[59] and on the 25th he received the accolade of knighthood, the king himself according to ancient custom putting the badge of the order about his neck.[60]

He found the Garter's tower or official residence at Windsor castle in a dilapidated condition, and expended about 400*l.* in the repairs of the house the year after his appointment.[61] His income was 100*l.* a year, which he received out of the customs of the port of London, and the expences connected with his new office amounted in the first year to more than one half of his annual salary.[62] He had however obtained a position which must have been peculiarly gratifying to him, although the evening of life had arrived and his sun was about to set. He was now 72, and it might seem that he was somewhat reluctant to accept the honour which was forced upon him by others, fearing that the small emoluments of the office and his own very moderate estate would scarcely enable him to support the dignity of knighthood.[63]

In 1684 he lost his old antiquarian friend, Ralph Sheldon of Besley in Worcestershire esq., who bequeathed all his manuscript pedigrees and other papers (not written with his own hand) to the heralds' office, and Anthony à Wood was consulted by the family on the carrying out of the bequest. Dugdale roundly charged old Anthony with dishonourably keeping back some of the valuable manuscripts which Mr. Sheldon had designed for the heralds, and the bitter and sarcastic remarks of Wood, smarting under the charge, must have been peculiarly offensive to Dugdale. Some at least of Dugdale's suspicions were not without foundation, whilst part of the information he had received was inaccurate. Dugdale had deliberately accused Dr. Kuerden, the Lancashire antiquary, with having improperly retained in his possession four of Mr. Sheldon's manuscripts, but, as Anthony wrote in his friend's vindication and his own, "to do ye man right," he had only two, and Dugdale was simply requested to obtain possession of them.[64] And yet, when it might have been supposed that the quarrel between the two impatient authors had extinguished their friendship for ever, Wood, in the same fierce letter, without the expression of a kind or genial word, desired Dugdale to send him full replies to nine special biographical queries, which information he wished to use in his incomparable Athenæ.[65] It seems probable that the violent ebullition of his anger was over, and that he thought his old friend would not be very eager to retaliate. Can it be truly said,

> "Nor rough nor barren are the winding ways
> Of hoar antiquity, but strown with flowers?"[66]

He ranked amongst his personal friends, as might have been expected, some of the greatest men of letters of the century. He corresponded with bishop Jeremy Taylor and sir Thomas Brown; and if he did not know Milton it might either arise from the unsettled state of the time, or more probably from their opposite religious and political views. His friends were also Clarendon, the lord keeper Bridgeman (of whom he had as good an opinion as of his wife a bad one), Thomas Blount the author of the curious work on Tenures and the Law Dictionary, Somner the author of the Saxon Dictionary, the publication of which Dugdale promoted, Wood, Sheldon, bishop Gilbert Burnet a whig, and dean Granville a tory. The last named conscientious divine, addressing Dugdale on the 3rd November 1683, observes that he had found him "to be, what is very hard to find even among the clergy, I mean, a true Churchman, a lover of order and exact conformity, not allowing any liberty to exalt private prudence above the Church's. A loyal and learned man, an eminent champion for our Common Prayer Book, and true to the king and constitution."[67] Dryden and the "magnificent Dorset," as Macaulay calls him, do not seem to have been amongst his friends.

Sir William Dugdale died on the 10th February 1685–6 at Blythe hall, in his eighty-first year, after a few days' illness occasioned by a cold contracted by tarrying too long in the moist meadows near his house;[68] or as Anthony à Wood writes, "by attending too much to his worldly concerns;"[69] although his means were small and the proportions of his household very moderate. His remains were deposited in a stone coffin in a little vault which in the year 1676 he had himself prepared in the chancel of Shustoke church; and where his wife, to whom he had been married nearly fifty-nine years, had been buried in 1681, at the age of 75. He died in the extreme of life in the full possession and perfection of his matured intellectual faculties, and had conducted, only a few months before his decease, a work through the press, so that he had died, like an old knight, in harness, the ink in his pen scarcely dry, and the last proof just corrected. The inscription on his tomb was written by himself, and in writing it he must have sorrowfully felt that the "pomp of heraldry," as well as the other "glories of our state," as one of his contemporaries expressed it, were "shadows, not substantial things." His son John succeeded to the inheritance, was connected with the College of arms, became Norroy and was knighted in 1685–86, and dying in the year 1700 left a son William and a grandson John. At the death of the latter in 1749, unmarried, the estate passed by will to his nephew Richard Geast, eldest son of Richard Geast esq. by his sister Jane Dugdale, and to his heirs male. This gentleman assumed the surname and arms of Dugdale in 1799, and died in 1806. He was succeeded by his son, Dugdale Stratford Dugdale esq. M.P. for the county of Warwick, who dying in 1836 left issue by his first wife, the hon. Elizabeth Curzon, daughter of Assheton viscount Curzon and Dorothy, sister of Richard earl Grosvenor, an only son, William Stratford Dugdale esq. M.P., who married in 1827 a sister of Edward first baron Portman.

On the 15th May 1667 Dugdale has recorded that he delivered to the office of arms "a fair copy" of his Visitation of Lancashire,[70] in a volume bound up in russet leather and clasp.[71] And on the 30th June 1669 he records that he delivered to the same guardians the first copies of all his Visitations, in four volumes.[72] These Visitation books, as they are called, contain the pedigrees of the gentry, signed generally by some member of the family and attested by the herald. They were compiled under the authority of a commission granted by writ of privy seal to the Kings of arms, the earliest of which is dated in 1528 and the last in 1686. These warrants were issued about every twenty-five years, but there was no fixed or settled time.[73] The Lancashire Visitation book of Dugdale of 1664–65 contains about two hundred and seventy pedigrees in the tabular form, occupying more than three hundred and twenty pages, besides numerous sketchings of arms, as there is scarcely a pedigree without a shield of arms attached.

It is necessary to state that all the pedigrees here printed are carefully and accurately transcribed, from the letter A down to the letter S, from sir William Dugdale's MS. in the College of arms, and that the expense of obtaining these official copies is a formidable item in the accounts of the Chetham Society, although the rev. George Hornby B.D. and colonel Egerton Leigh liberally contributed 20*l.* towards the expense. The few remaining pedigrees succeeding the letter S have been taken from a copy of Dugdale's Visitation, with occasional additions by his personal friend Hopkinson, the Yorkshire antiquary, which, on being compared with the original, appears as nearly as possible identical with it, except that it is not in a tabular form. It is somewhat remarkable that no exact copy of Dugdale's Lancashire Visitation is known to exist except in the College of arms.

It would be unjust indiscriminately to discredit the arduous labours and to impugn the genealogical veracity of the heralds of the seventeenth century, but their pedigrees ought most assuredly to be received with great caution, and few of them to be regarded as indisputably correct unless tested by documentary evidence. It was never intended that the Tabard should protect the errors or sanction the mistakes even of Dugdale.
